1 We won't have to witness the Trump dementia show for much longer because he is rapidly changing now. That's the thing- dementia steadily worsens. His condition will degrade to meet whatever threshold even his most ardent supporters insist on seeing b4 they admit he has dementia

2 The word is out. Trump's mental decline was discussed again on Nicolle Wallace's show on Friday. She asked the panel, like she did 2 days earlier "What's wrong with him?" John Heilemann called it straight out. He specifically pointed out how Trump is worsening. A powerful stmt:

"If you go back to not even the 2015-2016 period, I think if you go back and look at his interviews, the Howard Stern interviews, which had objectionable things in them, if you look at the interviews he gave in the '80s and '90s and even the early 2000s, they're a world of difference with how he conducts himself now. And when you read the interviews, or when he gives a print interview which occasionally happens, you look at the transcript and it is just, word salad is the wrong way to describe it. He has a hard time not just prosecuting a complex argument but finishing a sentence. That's a coherent, single sentence with a subject, verb and an object. He doesn't do that very well."

"And that is not how he was 20 years ago. Not. Again, you can look on YouTube. Look at the old speeches. Whatever you thought of him in his disagreeableness, he was a relatively coherent person giving relatively coherent interviews. I have often said if you met him at a backyard barbecue at a friend's house, and you walked up and said, I'm sorry about your father or uncle, I had an aunt who had Alzheimer's. I've seen what dementia does, because he often conducts himself like a sort of addled old man feeding pigeons in the park. I think that's a thing that has been progressive. He was like that as a candidate, worse now in the White House. You know what it's like to be in there. The pressure of the job, even if you're Trump, even if you're not present in most governing realities, the pressure and strain are all the things that impact that state of cognitive function."

3 A great question by @kathypeyser : "Why do people have such difficulty acknowledging that the POTUS has snowballing dementia? It baffles me."

Here's 10 Reasons why it took a while:

1 It's a multi-year progression. Early years go undiagnosed & changes comes gradually at first

4 10 Reasons:

2 People can't conceive of a mentally ill POTUS

3 He motormouths repetition that 30% of people zone out & believe

4 The WH does everything for him

5 Denial- His supporters will feel stupid for backing a mentally ill POTUS

6 Zero Integrity exists w/ him & his family

5 10 Reasons:

7 Ppl need to see the total wipeout he's doing now. He's a spectacle- balance, involuntary movements & verbal incoherence
8 A series of bogus, incomplete physicals
9 MSM has been lax on the issue
10 Opportunists get what they want out of him & don't want it to end

6 Even opportunists can sense when the show is over. Nikki Haley is warming up in Iowa & Mitt Romney "boldly" said he might not support Trump in 2020- easy to do since Trump won't be the GOP candidate on election night.

Layered threads. 2020 not happening

7 MSM is moving in the right direction. They can't miss on this one because Trump's worsening condition will make their recent comments will look tame. The reporter that breaks the story of Trump's health cover up, will uncover a whopper of scandal. Drugs, enablers, forgeries....

8 If Congress takes up the issue, they shouldn't waste time talking about Trump's narcissism. DC has more narcissists per square foot than anywhere on earth. It will sound partisan if it devolves into marveling about his crazed behavior & what he says. GOP will say he's just fine

9 Focus on the underlying neurological condition- irreversible degenerative damage & the grim prognosis. He's deep in to it & it only goes in one direction- down. There will be future presidents who are narcissists. We don't want another person w/ dementia to ever occupy the WH.
